It is finally Christmas Eve, and we are snuggled in at Sloane's home. We closed the store at 5:00 today, and the last two gifts we sold were to two different young men for their grandmothers. The day was filled with quirks and lots of laughter. We had to drop one of the cash drawers on the floor from three feet to get it to open.... A customer had to tell Casey what an item number was after Sloane had told her three times.... The Minsky's pizza guy told us he would miss us next week while we are away from the store.... And, yes, we popped a bottle of champagne at 12:30 to share a mimosa toast with our shoppers - which may explain some of the quirks.

Now we are having a sing-along of holiday songs led by a 5-year-old in red polkadot PJs while a 13-year-old performs a "light show" with lit LED balls on strings.... early presents very well received.

We wish you a very merry Christmas... quirks and all.
